

DIVORCING OEDIPUS

A MODERN DAY TRAGEDY IN THE DEPTHS OF ADDICTION AND FAMILY DARK SECRETS

M. OPHELIA

M. Ophelia currently lives in the Pacific Northwest with her children and her dog, Miss McButter. Ophelia is originally from the Southeast. She has enjoyed a life of adventure, having lived in numerous places in the United States, including Alaska. She graduated with a degree in Political Science, from Western Washington University. However, her passion has always been writing.

Ophelia has written two unpublished novels in addition to "D.O." She enjoys exploring nature and is an advocate for many charitable causes. She has volunteered and served on the committees of many non-profits. Currently, she is focused on serving others as a healing arts practitioner through the Tree of Life Sanctuary. She is a Universal of Life Church Minister.

Faith Nathaniel, a mom in her early thirties, is living the picture-perfect life. Trey, her husband, is tall, dark, handsome, and in-line to take over his family's multimillion-dollar business, a privately-owned drug and alcohol rehabilitation center, St. Mary's. Faith matches all the expected images-she volunteers at her children's private school, works with charities and co-hosts Gala's across Fairbanks.

One night in October, Faith's perfect picture is shattered forever. She intercepts a suspicious text message on Trey's phone. She confronts him. He refuses to reveal his mistress's identity. Faith is anguished and kicks him out. Trey moves in with his mother. The following day, Trey and his mother begin to viscously attack a heartbroken, unsuspecting, naïve Faith. Faith is left bewildered and with a lot of unanswered questions.

Divorcing Oedipus is a whirlwind page-turner about the lives of an American family, struggling with mental illness, power and greed. M. Ophelia's hilarious narrative, about the pitfalls of a wife trying to live her life to please others and getting gob smacked for her efforts, is a riveting, realistic story of a powerless wife and mother navigating an elitist Alaskan family, who employ their excessive resources to destroy her.

Will she recoil in retreat? Or will she make lemonade out of lemons?
